WELCOME TO METRO PHILLY

SAM NEWHOUSE, REPORTER

Philly commuters got a little taste of chaos this week when panicked riders aboard a Regional Rail train fled onto the tracks, spooked by a loud bang that somehow morphed into shouts of "Fire!" SEPTA is investigating the incident, but said passengers shouldn't evacuate a train unless told to do so by SEPTA staff. Read more about it inside and at metrophilly.us.

JULIA LOUIS-DREYFUS BATTLES BREAST CANCER

1 Emmy-winning comedic actress Julia Louis-Dreyfus said that she was battling breast cancer and highlighted the case for universal healthcare. Louis-Dreyfus, 56, who plays foul-mouthed fictitious U.S. president Selina Meyer on HBO's "Veep," said, "One in eight women get breast cancer. Today, I'm the one," in a short post on social media. "The good news is that I have the most glorious group of supportive and caring family and friends and fantastic insurance through my union. The bad news is that not all women are so lucky, so let's fight all cancers and make universal health care a reality," the actress wrote. Louis-Dreyfus won a record sixth Emmy award for comedy actress for her role as Meyer earlier this month. She became famous in the early 1990s for her role of Elaine Benes on NBC's "Seinfeld."

TRUMP: NFL OWNERS ARE AFRAID OF THEIR PLAYERS

2 President Donald Trump said he believes that owners of National Football League teams are afraid of their players, his latest criticism of NFL players kneeling during the U.S. national anthem at games to protest racial disparities in the country. The Republican president told "Fox & Friends" in an interview broadcast on Thursday that he is friends with many NFL team owners and they were "in a box" over how to handle the kneeling protests. "They say, 'we are in a situation where we have to do something.' I think they're afraid of their players, you want to know the truth. And I think it's disgraceful," he said. The White House did not immediately respond to a request for comment on whether the president was concerned his comments might inflame racial tensions.

INSURED LOSSES FROM MARIA TOTAL $15-30B

4 Risk modeling firm RMS said on Thursday that it estimated insured losses from Hurricane Maria of $15-30 billion. The estimate relates to wind damage, storm surge and inland flooding from the hurricane, with Puerto Rico and Dominica suffering the most destruction, RMS said in a statement. Rival modeling firm AIR Worldwide earlier this week estimated insured losses for Maria, which hit the Caribbean last week, of $40-$85 billion.

US JUDGE: BLACK LIVES MATTER CANNOT BE SUED

5 A Louisiana police officer cannot sue Black Lives Matter because it is a social movement, a U.S. judge ruled on Thursday, finding the campaign could not be held responsible for injuries he got at a protest. The unidentified officer sued Black Lives Matter and an activist involved in a July 2016 protest in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, where the officer was struck by a rock. The Black Lives Matter movement began with the hashtag #BlackLivesMatter on social media in 2012 after black high school student Trayvon Martin was shot dead in Sanford, Florida, by neighborhood watch volunteer George Zimmerman. Zimmerman was acquitted of second degree murder and manslaughter. It grew into a nationwide movement in response to the use of excessive force by police, particularly against black men.

SEPTA tells riders not to panic during train power losses

A massive transit shutdown Wednesday night didn't need to happen, reports suggest.

SAM NEWHOUSE
sam.newhouse@metro.us

SEPTA is asking riders to not panic and run on the tracks when they hear a loud noise, as happened Wednesday and wound up shutting down train traffic for a full hour.

Panicked passengers fleeing a Regional Rail car where "fire" was shouted wound up shutting down all train traffic for about an hour on Wednesday evening after many of them started walking on the tracks back to the station.

> "People took it upon themselves to start self-evacuating and that became a dangerous situation."
> Fran Kelly

"We understand it was inconvenient for our riders during one of our busiest times of the day, but our crews had to act quickly and responsibly and it was the right thing to do," said SEPTA Assistant General Manager Fran Kelly.

While Kelly said SEPTA is investigating the incident, it appears that people frightened by their own imaginations wound up causing hours of chaos for thousands of commuters.

The commuters where the confusion originated were on a Paoli-Thorndale train that lost power. Passengers quickly became frightened after hearing a loud bang, reportedly from a breaker being tripped as power was turned back on, causing the group to stampede out, multiple reports and eyewitnesses stated.

Some kicked out windows, some ran through train cars, and others shouted "fire!" as they fled onto the tracks, before marching all the way back to the station.

"Some of us just jumped off the Paoli Septa train because there was a panic about nonexistent fire," Comcast Executive Director of Artificial Intelligence products Jeanine Heck tweeted, along with a photo of the crowd, as she walked along the tracks.

"People just did things on their own and other people followed," Kelly said. "People took it upon themselves to start self-evacuating and that became a dangerous situation."

Meanwhile, right around 6 p.m. Wednesday, thousands of other Regional Rail commuters were stranded as fire alarms went off inside the Suburban Station concourse, with many pouring to the streets above seeking cabs home while all Regional Rail traffic through Center City was put on hold for an hour. Regular train service was not restored for an hour.

STAMPEDE SURVIVAL

Humans in large groups are prone to a herd mentality that can cause panic to spread rapidly.

In 2015 in Mecca, the holy city of Islam in Saudi Arabia, 2,000 Muslims participating in a religious hajj were crushed to death when a panic — the cause of which is disputed, but was rumored to be over a report of a bomb — sparked a stampede.

Experts advise the public to avoid large crowds of people because of this possibility of panic and because once caught inside a stampede, escape is impossible.

If trapped in a stampede, the only option is to attempt to flow with the crowd and try not to fall.

An investigation of the full incident is underway, Kelly said. He added that SEPTA is looking into ways to make more educational safety announcements.

Passengers are asked to report concerns and questions about their train to SEPTA staff and to not evacuate or pursue other emergency measures unless directed to do so by SEPTA staff.

Kenney to Philly: let's end traffic-related deaths by 2030

In Philadelphia, 50 percent of all traffic crashes occur on 12 percent of the city's roads.

So, the city might be able to knock down traffic accidents just by focusing redesign and safety efforts on just over one-eighth of the city's streets.

That is one of the observations gleaned by Philly's Vision Zero Task force launched by Mayor Jim Kenney.

On Thursday, the task force released its three-year action plan, the result of research the city has been conducting in traffic studies and public outreach for months. Mayor Jim Kenney said the report offers a "series of realistic and affordable recommendations."

A Philadelphia police officer on the Ben Franklin Parkway directs traffic. CHARLES MOSTOLLER

"The Task Force took the time to listen to Philadelphians from every neighborhood and background," Kenney said in a statement. "There is no excuse not to act to prevent future tragedies. Philadelphians deserve better."

Philly is one of several big cities that has a Vision Zero plan in place, aiming to eliminate all traffic-related fatalities through road redesign.

From March to July, the city conducted more than 40 community meetings, met with transportation experts and obtained hundreds of public comments to prepare the report.

Managing Director Michael DiBerardinis, chair of the Vision Zero task force, said the three-year action plan would help Philly ensure that "traffic safety takes priority over traffic convenience."

Youth traffic-safety education and prioritizing street improvements on what the city has labeled the High Injury Network _ a "comprehensive mapping system identifying and targeting the most dangerous streets" — are part of the actions proposed in the city's new plan.

Philly is also seeking legislative solutions to let the city set its own speed limits, use radar guns for enforcement, and potentially develop "automated speed enforcement."

Plans remain in development. Focusing on the High Injury network may truly revolutionize street safety in Philly, the city said.

"By focusing engineering, education and enforcement on the highest-risk streets, we can begin to make real progress towards zero deaths," said Kelley Yemen, Director of the city's Complete Streets program.

BU researchers may have found a way to diagnose CTE in someone living

This is a breakthrough for the degenerative brain disease, which currently can only be identified after a patient dies.

Boston University has been leading the research on chronic traumatic encephalopathy, or CTE, and it may have just made a breakthrough after identifying a possible way to diagnose CTE in living patients.

CTE is a degenerative brain disease often found in those who suffer repeated head trauma, like football players. Most recently, it was confirmed that former Patriots player Aaron Hernandez had an advanced stage of CTE after researchers examined his brain posthumously.

That's the thing – medical professionals are been able to diagnose CTE only after someone has died. The new discovery means treatments could be developed to help those suffering from CTE, researchers said, and even possibly prevent the condition.

"This is a step forward from our knowledge gained in understanding CTE from brain donations," Ann McKee, the study's senior author and director of BU's CTE Center, told BU Today. "It's a hopeful step. The whole point is to understand as much as we can from the individuals who've fallen so we can apply it to our future veterans and athletes."

In the study, published in the Public Library of Science's journal Plos One on Wednesday, researchers identified a biomarker, protein CCL11, which may help distinguish between CTE and Alzheimer's disease. Both conditions often have similar symptoms, researchers say, and Alzheimer's also can only be diagnosed via an autopsy.

Researchers studied the brains of 23 former college and professional football players for the study, comparing them with the brains of 50 people who had Alzheimer's and were not athletes, and to 18 control people who were not athletes.

"Significantly elevated" levels of that biomarker, CCL11, were found in the brains of people with CTE.

Researchers also compared how high that CCL11 level was to how long those people had played football, and found a positive correlation between the two.

Though the findings are important, they're a building block — more research is needed, BU said, to see if higher levels of CCL11 happen earlier or later in the CTE process, and if those levels can predict how severe someone's disease will be. BU researchers have previously identified four stages of CTE.

NFL

Though the scientific discovery could help athletes, it may not be good news for the NFL.

Andrew Brandt, former vice president for the Green Bay Packers and columnist at Sports Illustrated's MMQB, pointed out in a tweet that CTE still isn't a covered condition in the NFL's concussion litigation settlement.

"I see a new motion or refiling, in the distance!" former NFL player Seth Joyner said in response to Brandt. "This could be a game changer, the NFL's worst nightmare!"

Experts call President Trump 'the most dangerous man in the world'

He lacks trust, verges on paranoia, doesn't live in the real world — and a whole lot more that will keep you up at night.

MICHAEL MARTIN
letters@metro.us

A group of experts who have analyzed the president's behavior have reached some scary conclusions about Trump mental health, concluding that he exhibits symptoms of paranoia, living in an alternate reality and three personality disorders. The analyses, collected in the new issue of Newsweek, include those of several experts who have studied areas such as violence, law and psychoanalysis. Some of their findings:

• Trump lacks any sense of reality.

"Trump's insistence on the truth of matters proved to be untrue ['alternative facts'] is well known, even when such denial is not in his interest," noted Dr. Lance Dodes of the Boston Psychoanalytic Society. He pointed to Trump's embrace of birtherism and his claims that former President Obama wiretapped Trump Tower, that he lost the popular vote to millions voting illegally and that his inauguration crowd was the biggest ever.

• Trump verges on clinical paranoia.

Trump has often boasted about his lack of trust: "People are too trusting. I'm a very untrusting guy." "Hire the best people and don't trust them." "The world is a vicious and brutal place. Even your friends are out to get you. They want your job, your money, your wife."

"As president, Trump is systematically shredding trust in the institutions he now commands," noted journalist Gail Sheehy, who said that he has alienated Republicans and the conservative bloc he needs to pass legislation. This, after calling former President Obama "sick" and Hillary Clinton "the devil," comparing the 17 U.S. intelligence agencies to Nazis and dubbing the media "the enemy of the people."

• He's a perfect storm of personality disorders.

Trump acts only in the moment, with disregard for consequences and a primary focus on how things will affect him. "In Trump, we have a frightening Venn diagram of three circles: the first is extreme present hedonism; the second, narcissism; and the third, bullying behavior," said Phillip Zombardo, a professor emeritus at Stanford who authored the landmark Stanford prison study. "These three circles overlap in the middle to create an impulsive, immature, incompetent person who, when in the position of ultimate power, easily slides into the role of tyrant, complete with family members sitting at his proverbial 'ruling table.'"

• He is unprecedentedly dangerous.

"Sometimes, a person's dangerousness is so obvious that one does not need professional training in either psychiatry or criminology to recognize it," said Dr. James Gilligan, a professor of psychiatry and law who is a violence-studies expert that looks to Trump's history of words and actions: his questioning why the U.S. has nuclear weapons if they don't use them, his incendiary campaign against the African-American Central Park Five, accused of rape, but later acquitted and his suggestion at a campaign rally that Second Amendment supporters should assassinate Hillary Clinton.

"If psychiatrists with decades of experience doing research on violent offenders do not confirm the validity of the conclusion that many nonpsychiatrists have reached, that Trump is extremely dangerous — indeed, by far the most dangerous of any president in our lifetimes — then we are not behaving with appropriate professional restraint and discipline," Gilligan said.

Deleting tweets from verified Trump Twitter account might be illegal

President Donald Trump was wrong about Luther Strange, and when victory was declared in favor of his opponent for Alabama's open Senate seat, some tweets immediately disappeared from the verified Trump Twitter account.

Specifically missing were three tweets in which Trump peddled his endorsement of Strange and encouraged people to vote for him. But as most people know, nothing really ever disappears on the internet, and those deleted tweets are preserved in perpetuity on a growing list of other tweets Trump has deleted from his verified Twitter account — tweets some legal experts say could spell trouble for the Trump administration.

Since Trump took office on Jan. 20, his @realdonaldtrump account has deleted 41 posts, according to archives maintained by ProPublica, a nonprofit journalism website. That number swells to 49 if you count tweets deleted from the @POTUS account since Trump's inauguration.

President Trump's Twitter use has drawn criticism. GETTY IMAGES

Those deleted tweets are now central to a debate on whether Trump is violating federal presidential record-keeping laws.

The Presidential Records Act mandates the preservation of White House communications, which includes electronic messages like email, Facebook and Twitter.

Some legal experts say Trump's personal Twitter account might have gotten off the hook if not for Trump's own White House staff declaring his Twitter posts as official government statements.

Still, Trump isn't the only president to delete tweets; Barack Obama also deleted an occasional tweet, Politico reported, but his administration archived those tweets.

The key question is whether the Trump administration is doing the same, which according to themselves, they are. In March, David Ferriero, who heads the National Archives and Records Administration, told senators he was "informed by White House officials that they are, in fact," archiving tweets deleted from Trump's personal verified Twitter account.

In June, three ethics groups filed suit against Trump, demanding that courts stop him from deleting posts from his social media pages.

The Trump administration has until Oct. 6 to respond. ERIN TIERNAN

The Finest & the Bravest: How cops and firefighters are helping in Puerto Rico

Heroic first responders are going the extra mile to aid people on the island in the aftermath of Hurricane Maria.

DAVID CORDERO MERCADO
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

The fatigue that inevitably comes with repeated 12-hour work shifts isn't deterring police and fire officials in Puerto Rico from going the extra mile in the wake of Hurricane Maria.

The local heroes have been working almost nonstop since well before Maria struck the island. According to Officer Jose Antonio Rivera Ortiz, the long shifts began from the emergency that arose in the wake of Hurricane Irma three weeks ago. But that has not taken away the spirit of Rivera, 42, who yesterday was located on Pinero Avenue in Rio Piedras controlling traffic.

"I've been able to help people and give them support, even if it's in the form of guidance," said the San Juan officer as he directed traffic. "We are controlling things, people have been cooperating."

"I have not been able to go see [my family] because [police] are glued to our work, but I have been able to have telephone communication," he explained about relatives in Ponce and Yauco.

Not only have state police officers been active at all times, but the municipal police have also stepped up. Sgt. Luis Diaz Figueroa has been working alongside 20 other agents in the area of Santurce to oversee traffic control and any other tasks that the community requires.

"Citizens have brought police food and water, and we're thankful because we've, in fact, been neglecting our own needs to care for others," said Figueroa.

The sergeant has three children — 8, 10 and 21 years old. The oldest of the three is in the Army and is also acting in a support role on the island after Maria. Figueroa finally saw his children, who live in Naranjito, on Sunday.

"It's part of the work that we have to do," he said of his time away from his kids. "It's the work we chose."

Police aren't the only ones working long hours for the sake of the island. Puerto Rico's firefighters have also been working around the clock to clear debris and attend to emergencies.

Lt. Santos Ayala of the Barrio Obrero fire station in San Juan said firefighters have worked hand-in-hand with medical emergencies officials in the rescue and transportation of people.

"From the moment the sun broke through after the hurricane, we've been struck by what we've seen, what we've experienced," said Ayala. He described "moments of anguish" after the storm, when he didn't know whether his family was safe. He was able to reach his wife and two children, aged 10 and 19, about 42 hours after Maria had passed. After that, his 19-year-old daughter decided to join her father's job as a volunteer and the firefighters.

"I wanted to join my dad to help Puerto Rico any way I can since we are in a crisis, and I have never experienced anything like this," said his daughter, Sannette Ayala Roman.

The teen recounted her reunion with her father: "I came out with tears. It was a very beautiful moment because all the tension went away."

Immediately after meeting up with her father, the young woman rode with him in the fire truck. "I've always liked this," she said.

About 1,650 firefighters are working around Puerto Rico in debris removal, rescue and emergency care, as are 86 additional NYPD firefighters who came to the island to help with recovery. About 372 Puerto Rican state police are patrolling roads around the island.

‘American Made’ tells the story of the country’s last real cowboy

Doug Liman and Tom Cruise on set UNIVERSAL PICTURES

Director Doug Liman talks to Metro about his pride in American opportunism.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
@MetroPhilly
gregory.wakeman@metro.us

“American Made” director Doug Liman wanted to celebrate the ambition that turned the USA into a superpower, and so he threw his weight behind a based-on-real-life film and cast the country’s biggest male lead.

While Barry Seal (Tom Cruise) went from being a bored commercial pilot to a CIA spy to a drug smuggler for the Medellin Cartel, the journey was packed with danger and risk. But it also made him a very, very rich man. Liman believed this story could only have happened here.

“Barry is quintessentially American. I wouldn’t use greed — I would use opportunist. If you’re walking down the street in London and saw a $100 bill laying there, you might turn it into the police station. In America, the crime would be to not pick it up and take it. That really is what is great about America.

“That attitude is why we have been an economic power house. From the Henry Ford assembly line to Facebook to Uber, the disrupters, the people seeing opportunity and taking it are American. That really is the spirit that ‘American Made’ is looking to celebrate. Barry Seal made a fortune while working for the CIA.

Liman said the movie “is not a movie about self-flagellation.”

“The good and the bad go together. But that American spirit, that can-do attitude ... we flew to the moon! There’s no other country that could put somebody else on the moon. No one else has done it after all these years.”

Liman said that when he first leafed through Gary Spinelli’s script, he instantly connected to Seal, especially when it came to “his attitude toward living and his pursuit of adventure at almost any cost.”

GETTY

“I am also a pilot. So that quest for adventure and damn the risks goes hand in hand with being a pilot, because it is extremely risky and about the greatest adventure you can have.”

For Liman, Seal was the last of his kind. He goes as far as to call Seal the last American cowboy. But rather than riding a horse, he piloted planes packed with cocaine.

“American Made” comes out Sept. 29.

Tom Cruise as drug smuggler Barry Seals. UNIVERSAL PICTURES

"American Made"

Director: Doug Liman
Stars: Tom Cruise, Domhnall Gleeson
Rating: R

If you've been waiting to see Tom Cruise back in the cockpit ever since "Top Gun" (it's been 31 years, people), now's your moment. "American Made" pairs "Bourne Identity" and "Mr. & Mrs. Smith" director Doug Liman with the Scientologist of the skies in this epic depiction of real-life drug smuggler Barry Seal. It may be hard to believe that the CIA recruited a TWA pilot and pitted him against cartels in South America and the Reagan White House, but they sure did, and the result is part gangster classic, part big screen thriller. It is visually arresting, preposterously entertaining and, simply put, a whole lot of fun.

"Mark Felt: The Man Who Brought Down the White House"

Director: Peter Landesman
Stars: Liam Neeson, Diane Lane, Ike Barinholtz, Marton Csokas, Josh Lucas, Brian d'Arcy James
Rating: NR

You know what's even more exhausting than saying "Mark Felt: The Man Who Brought Down the White House"? Watching it. For a film that's rife with potential (especially considering today's political climate), from its weighty, twisty plot to its leading man, "Mark Felt" just keeps taking wrong turns as it tries to depict the story of "Deep Throat" and the Watergate scandal of 1974. Writer and director Peter Landesman actually builds a compelling mood and tone as he lays the breadcrumbs that will ultimately lead to Nixon's downfall, establishing why Felt deemed it necessary to expose the scandal, but, rather than the leak coming across as a national duty, Felt comes across as petty (hey, maybe that's how it really went down, but we weren't there ... or were we?!). The film's subplot about his family feels shoe-horned in and only jolts rather than enhances the story. Neeson is towering and, well, fine, and there are some impressive supporting performances, but ultimately "Mark Felt: The Man Who Brought Down The White House" feels lightweight. And that's before you start comparing it to "All the President's Men." GW

Harry Dean Stanton, who died on September 15. MAGNOLIA PICTURES

"Lucky"

Director: John Carroll Lynch
Stars: Harry Dean Stanton, David Lynch

It's always hard to be objective when you watch a film starring a beloved actor who has just passed away.

Considering the length and breadth of Harry Dean Stanton's illustrious career this was always going to be doubly difficult when it came to "Lucky." Heavily inspired by his personality and viewpoint, this tale of a 90-year-old atheist's spiritual journey almost feels like a biopic, as Stanton meshed perfectly with the character of Lucky. It may not feel comfortable watching a wizened man in his final days washing his armpits, but the 86 minutes you invest become worthwhile when you make it to the final, highly emotional scene. It's a performance that puts Stanton as a posthumous Best Actor Oscar contender. But, of course, that might just be the grief talking.

History does more than repeat itself — it dances around itself.

KYLE V. HILLER
letters@metro.us

Satire and parody are indispensable things when it comes to coping with the tense sociopolitical climate in our country. Theater is a perfect platform to exercise those things in a way that builds awareness, sparks conversation and paints the perpetual cycle of history in a contemporary and cautionary light.

"Cabaret" is a beacon, and Arden Theatre Artistic Director Matthew Decker assures that while there is bountiful comedy and derision, the play dances around an important question: "Why do we continue to allow destructive powers to gain control of society?"

The play takes place at the Kit Kat Club, the hottest nightspot in 1929 Berlin. American writer Cliff Bradshaw travels to Germany in search of inspiration and pleasure, and finds both in nightclub performer Sally Bowles. However, outside the club's doors, the Nazis' impending rise to power threatens to splinter their decadent lifestyle.

"It's similar to our daily shows and nightly news shows," Decker added. "That was cabaret at that time." "Cabaret" was originally conceived in 1966 by Hal Prince and written by John Van Druten in response to the American civil-rights movement. Similar tensions have reappeared in 2017, and a performance like "Cabaret" is more than just important — it's vital.

"I think theater should always be reflective of the society consuming it," said Decker. "It's time to present performances that are not fluff and encourage us to look inward." Decker went further to discuss not only the responsibility of art and theater, but also

Get ready for the 4th annual WXPN 5K Run for Musicians on Call

The best part? It's followed by an '80s music dance party.

JENNIFER LOGUE
@jenniferlogue
jennifer.logue@metro.us

Better get your running shoes ready. This Sunday, WXPN is hosting its fourth annual 5K Run for Musicians on Call.

The event will begin at Penn Park in University City at 8:30 a.m.

From 9 a.m. to 11 a.m., there will be a post-run dance party at World Cafe Live featuring WXPN's DJ Robert Drake. The admission is free for runners and $5 for everyone else.

The WXPN 5K Run benefits the WXPN Musicians on Call Program, which brings local musicians into healthcare facilities in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware to perform for patients and their families.

"I love the opportunity to bring music to the sick," says Helen Leicht, WXPN midday host, assistant program director and coordinator for WXPN Musicians on Call.

"My mom was in the hospital with lung cancer. I was with her when Melody Gardot stopped by to say hello and sing 'Somewhere over the Rainbow.' I saw my mom smiling and singing along with Melody. I will never forget that day."

She adds, "I'm so thrilled that WXPN brought the MOC program to Philadelphia in 2004 and we have given our volunteer musicians and guides a way to give back to our community through music."

Since the program began in 2004, over 200 volunteer musicians have performed for more than 100,000 patients and their families.

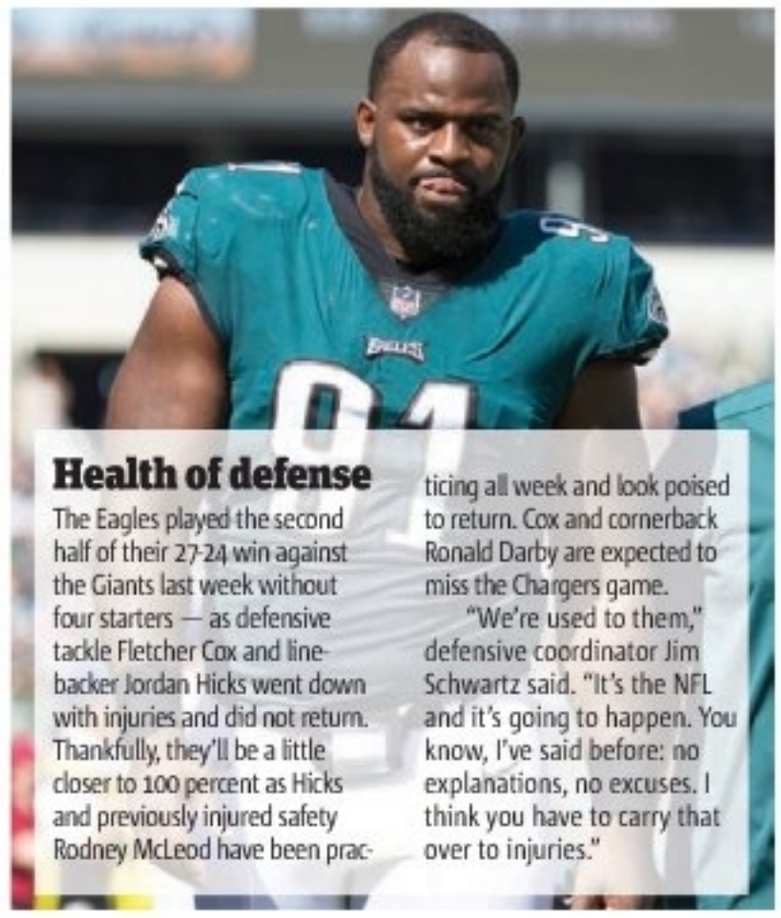
3 Things to watch for as Eagles head west to face Chargers

The Linc West?

With a small, 27,000-seat stadium for the newly Los Angeles Chargers, there has been a notorious and unsurprising lack of hometown fandom as the team plays for the first season in it's new home. It is expected that Eagles fans, who always travel well, will be numerous at the StubHub Center. Could this help give the Eagles an extra edge out West?

"It's going to be different for all of us," Eagles head coach Doug Pederson, who says the Eagles will stay on east coast time when they fly to California Saturday morning. "It will be a little different. I don't want that to be a distraction for our football team, and for any of us going out there. But I do know that our fans do travel well, and they are all over the country and I would expect probably a good turnout for Eagle fans this weekend."



Health of defense

The Eagles played the second half of their 27-24 win against the Giants last week without four starters — as defensive tackle Fletcher Cox and linebacker Jordan Hicks went down with injuries and did not return. Thankfully, they'll be a little closer to 100 percent as Hicks and previously injured safety Rodney McLeod have been practicing all week and look poised to return. Cox and cornerback Ronald Darby are expected to miss the Chargers game.

"We're used to them," defensive coordinator Jim Schwartz said. "It's the NFL and it's going to happen. You know, I've said before: no explanations, no excuses. I think you have to carry that over to injuries."

WEEK 4

Kickoff at 4:05 p.m. on FOX

In Sproles' absence, next man up at RB looks to be Smallwood

The Eagles will miss Darren Sproles. There is no doubt about it.

The running back, receiver and punt returner who is likely destined to the NFL Hall of Fame broke his arm and tore his ACL against the Giants and won't be back this season — if ever. Which means it's "next man up" for the Eagles' offense.

Sproles has had 15 carries and seven catches in the early going — good for about 14 percent of touches for Eagles skill players. This will need to be replaced. Sproles also was on the field for 41 percent of snaps for Philly, the most of any running back with Wendell Smallwood at 33 percent and LeGarrette Blount at 23 percent.

The Eagles will need to replace 41 percent of their running back personnel decisions, and they'll want to use a running back who can catch passes, who can pick up the blitz and block and who doesn't command the eyes of the defense like Blount does — as he's assumed to be on the field to run up the gut.

Wendell Smallwood will never get a better opportunity. ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Smallwood seems to fit the bill as the next Eagles' dual-purpose back and could have a breakout season should the Eagles continue to show committment to the run like they did in Week 3, running for 193 yards.

"There's no doubt Wendell is going to have an increased role," Eagles offensive coordinator Frank Reich said. "I think all the guys have some third down ability, but Wendell has really improved in that area. He's showed natural aptitude for it early, both from a protection standpoint and from a route-running standpoint. I'm not sure you can ever replace [Sproles] in that regard. He's just a unique player, but [I] feel good about Wendell and him stepping up."

Philly faces the Chargers in Week 4, a club that has allowed 440 rushing yards through three games. The Birds will look to expose that Los Angeles weakness and second-year tailback Smallwood could get the call in a split with Blount and rookie Corey Clement.

"He's smart. He's tough. We've seen it already this year," Eagles head coach Doug Pederson said of Smallwood. "He can be explosive, and he understands protection. I think every one of our backs can probably, do a little bit better in the protection. It's just the understanding. It's not necessarily knowing the protection. It's just hearing the call and going in the right direction. So they can all get better there. But I think Wendell has put himself in a good position to do more. Maybe have a little bit bigger role and expanded role in our offense."

EVAN MACY

On the line

The Eagles offensive line was good, not great in Week 3 and will need to be stout against a potent Chargers pass rush in Week 4. With uncertainty surrounding the guard position — with Chance Warmack likely unseating Isaac Seumalo as the starter — the unit will have its toughest test yet against Joey Bosa and Melvin Ingram.

"Ingram, I believe is leading the NFL in sacks, and Bosa is a, gosh, he's a high-motor, high-energy guy, relentless finisher," Pederson said. "These two guys, these two guys are tough to block. Our tackles have had — I thought both our tackles played extremely well Sunday against two elite pass rushers. They are going to have to do it again this week." EVAN MACY

NFL best bets: Week 3

Tennessee Titans (-1.5) at Houston Texans

This will be rookie quarterback Deshaun Watson's first start at home for Houston. He showed promise in his first two road starts, completing over 60 percent of his passes while proving elusive when he decided to scramble (108 yards on 13 combined carries). The Texans' O-line is among the worst in the league, but the Titans have had little success getting to the quarterback, so Watson shouldn't have to tuck-and-run that often against the Titans' 26th-ranked pass stoppers.

The Titans ground game is second by YPG, but they've faced some of the worst rush defenses in the league this year in Seattle (30th), Jacksonville (28th), and Oakland (20th). The Texans have allowed fewer than 100 YPG on the ground this year. They have also enjoyed a definite home-field advantage (8-2 in their last 10 at home) and have done quite well against Tennessee lately (5-1 in their last six meetings). All of this points to trouble for the Tennessee Titans.

The pick: Texans +1.5

Philadelphia Eagles at Los Angeles Chargers (-1)

This tilt features a dramatic mismatch in time of possession. Philadelphia is the best in the league (34:12), while the Chargers are 30th (27:20). The Eagles should not feel the sting of losing Darren Sproles to injury as their running back tandem (LeGarrette Blount, Wendell Smallwood and Corey Clement) is just fine and faces a moribund L.A. run-stopping unit (31st by YPG).

Philly is susceptible to the pass attack (25th by YPG), but they should be able to cheat up with Melvin Gordon likely to be less than 100 percent with a bum knee. Carson Wentz has been better than Philip Rivers by almost every measure through three games, so the Eagles have the advantage in the all-important quarterback battle as well.

This appears to be a generous spread, probably because people will bet the 0-3 Chargers who "need it more." You can bet the better team and get a point to do it, so take advantage.

The pick: Eagles +1

San Francisco 49ers at Arizona Cardinals (-7)

The 49ers (0-3) are still finding their way under new head coach Kyle Shanahan, but they are 2-1 ATS this season. The Cardinals will spot plenty of points to their division opponent on Sunday, and they've not been a great bet when favored by six or more.

Arizona will try to implement a strong aerial attack, but pass defense has been a relative strength for San Francisco (14th by YPG). While the Cardinals are ranked fourth by passing YPG, they're only averaging seven yards per pass with a passer rating of 76.1, both below league average.

Expect Carlos Hyde to grind out some first downs on the ground as the 49ers keep this potentially low-scoring contest close.

The pick: 49ers +7

Ben Simmons expects to be a front-runner for Rookie of the Year — even as he goes up against a stacked 2017 NBA draft class. GETTY IMAGES

Simmons says he's 100 percent healthy, wants to be Sixers' leader

Ben Simmons is confident he has improved enough to lead the youthful Sixers this season.

EVAN MACY
@evan_macy
evan.macy@metro.us

The following exchange occurred between Sixers' 2016 first overall pick Ben Simmons and the media a few days ago during the team's official Media Day.

"Ben Simmons, what are you better at after a year in the NBA?"

"Everything."

"What specifically?"

"Everything."

"But in particular?"

"Everything."

After sitting out the entire 2016-17 regular season after getting foot surgery, Simmons has been fighting is way back and taking mental reps on the sidelines. And after a year of watching the NBA from up close, the 6-foot-10 point-forward (who will play point guard for Brett Brown's offense) is beaming with confidence. The kind of confidence Sixers fans want to see from a potential superstar.

"The potential to be a great leader, it is not an easy thing to say, but I believe that I can lead this team even if I am one of the youngest guys on the team," Simmons said. "Learning a lot about who I am as a leader, teammate friend, players, everything."

Simmons is a rookie by technicality only. The 20-year-old will take the floor with a veteran mindset, looking to lead a team that will likely play at least four players in their first or second NBA seasons at the same time during stretches this year.

"You have to be open, you have to listen to your teammates, but you also have to be willing to address somebody if things don't go the right way or your way," Simmons said, "and that's what I am going to do this season."

Though he will likely be in the mix for Rookie of the Year, he seems to be under the radar as players like Lonzo Ball, Josh Jackson, Jason Tatum and teammate Markelle Fultz get more love and receive higher individual expectations. This doesn't bother Simmons at all. He doesn't appear to care less.

"I had a whole year to get better," Simmons said. "I am fine with that. I came to the states when I was 15 and no one knew who I was. I feel like I am back at that stage."

Simmons keeps in touch with Aussie roots, Embiid hits South Africa

During the offseason, when he wasn't pounding the pavement at the Sixers' camp in Camden, native Australian Ben Simmons — last year's first overall pick — visited his home country this summer.

"It was good to see everyone in my family," Simmons, who moved to Florida when he was a teenager to play high school basketball, said. "Friends coaches, I had my first camp out there it went really well it was about 200 kids. It went really well."

Teammate Joel Embiid also went abroad to play basketball with kids, heading all over Africa with Basketball Without Borders.

"I went to South Africa and also went home to Cameroon," Embiid said. "My main goal since I got to the league I wanted to go back to South Africa, Basketball Without Borders, that's where it all started to me. Me going back over there was just a message for those African kids that are trying to make it."

metro.us/horoscopes

Aries Overdoing it will be your downfall. Don't let temptation lead to excessive behavior. Walk away from unpredictable individuals.

Taurus Tie up loose ends. Go for an interview or enhance your resume to reflect the job you would like to be doing. Celebrate with someone you love.

Gemini Step back from emotionally unpredictable situations and people. Refuse to get caught in someone else's melodrama. Meddling will end up being costly.

Cancer Joint ventures are best looked at carefully before you decide to get involved. Don't make promises you may not be able to honor. Hold on to your cash.

Leo Choose practicality over desire and impulse. You can bring about change without taking a risk if you do your research before moving forward.

Virgo A physical challenge will motivate you to make changes geared toward self-improvement and personal growth. Love and romance are featured.

Libra By putting more effort into your home and family, you will excel. Learn from experience what works best for you, and do what's right.

Scorpio Reconnecting with old friends or colleagues will lead to interesting talks and new possibilities. The ideas that develop will spark your imagination.

Sagittarius You may crave change, but don't let temptation or indulgent behavior lead to personal, emotional or financial setbacks. Be realistic and moderate.

Capricorn Impulsive actions will be met with resistance. Be careful how you handle emotional situations. If someone is asking too much of you, back away.

Aquarius You may crave excitement and adventure, but don't let it lead to a costly affair. Keep your passwords protected and your personal belongings in a safe place.

Pisces Overreacting to situations involving a business or personal partner will be costly. Assess the situation before you jump to conclusions. EUGENIA LAST
